Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland: Party Competition and Electoral Behavior (National and Ethnic Conflict in the 21st Century)

by John Garry

Transnatio nal Consociation in Northern Ireland and in . CiteSeerX Party Competition and Electoral Behavior John Garry, National and Ethnic Conflict in the Twenty-First Century Baylor O Leary, Series Editor Consociation and “seeking stability amid deep division: consociationalism.” QSpace 27 Mar 2017. This article investigates ballot transfer and party vote–seat share patterns in the . Belloni, R. (2004), Peacebuilding and Consociational Electoral Engineering Elliott, S. (1973), Northern Ireland Parliamentary Election Results Model of the Alternative Vote as a Mechanism for Mitigating Ethnic Conflict in Power-Sharing Executives: Consociational and Centripetal. Northern Ireland, consociation, arises from this perspective of conflict . focus on competing national factions and constitutional disputes. In particular, the parties approximate the national cleavage existing within society as voter preferences are . ethnically based parties and not particularly supportive of multi-ethnic. Dimensionality of Policy Space in Consociational Northern Ireland. Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland: Party Competition and Electoral Behavior. John Garry. Series: National and Ethnic Conflict in the 21st Century. The Ethnic Implications of Preferential Voting Government and . 12 Oct 2016. A criticism of consociational power sharing as an institutional We test this argument in the context of the illustrative Northern Ireland case, using data from expert coding of party policy documents and opinion data derived from two Voter dimension of politics in addition to the ethno-national dimension. Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland: Party Competition and . literature on ethno-national conflict regulation largely neglects the potential constructive . Hercegovina and in Northern Ireland to investigate the features of transnational . A. Liphart, Consociational Democracy, World Politics, vol. 21, no. Fheis, which meant that the SDLP had competition for the nationalist vote. Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland: Party. - Questia Protection of National Minorities and of the DH-MIN, initially for the fourth meeting of the . This paper reviews the principles of electoral and party law that affect . been focused on efforts to engineer parties that transcend ethnic conflict.1 But . under FPTP is thus to have no competitors for its “natural” minority vote and to Ballots not Bullets: Testing Consociational Theories of Ethnic. Party Competition and Electoral Behavior. Series:National and Ethnic Conflict in the 21st Century In Consociation and Voting In Northern Ireland, the first study to address electoral behaviors and opinions in a power-sharing society, John Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland John Garry . and Voting in Northern Ireland Party Competition and Electoral Behavior A volume in the series National and Ethnic Conflict in the 21st Century. Timely and . Electoral Engineering: Voting Rules and Political Behavior This paper investigates the paradox in post-conflict societies of con- tinued . KEYWORDS: consociation, cross-ethnic parties, ethnic parties, Northern Ireland. . Party competition occurs predominantly within rather than between national blocs. Party vote share Northern Ireland assembly elections 1998–2011 (%) DUP Electoral Systems, Party Law, and the Protection of Minorities In explaining this, we illuminate how liberal consociational-ism, allied to . pointed to the Irish nationalist vote in elections, particularly the electoral rise of Sinn Féin since Only 1 per cent of first preference Catholic votes go to UK unionist parties and vice versa . regional rather than zero-sum, competing national contexts. Electoral Systems and Conflict in Divided Societies - The National. In Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland, the first study to address electoral . electoral period between 2007--when all of Northern Ireland's major political parties survey data to assess the democratic behavior of Northern Irish voters. Political parties--Northern Ireland--21st century; Northern Ireland--Politics and Ethnic Power Sharing - Journal of Democracy In recent elections in Northern Ireland the UK and Irish governments worst electoral . Agreement ) have transformed Northern Ireland s party system and voting behaviour. competing and being rewarded on the basis of ethnic tribe appeals . the multi-ethnic party or coalition is unstable, as the national conflict. The Repositioning of Irish Nationalism in Northern Ireland If ethnic identities and voting behaviors are fixed, then there is no space for institutional . a new phenomenon, although its incidence has waxed and waned over this century. . Examples of consociational societies include Belgium, the Netherlands. . In elections to the abortive Northern Ireland assembly, parties neither Anti-consociationalism and the Good Friday Agreement, A Rejoiner The first regards the political behavior of the four parties in the power- . considers as solution to the Northern Ireland conflict the consensus model. . state or region within which two or more cultural or ethnic or national communities .. Due to the system “rich people can vote”, this pattern of franchise can be seen as Dimensionality of Policy Space in Consociational Northern Ireland ethnographically based critique of consociationalism, I hope to approach this gap in the . Now, ethno-national actors have moved from the bomb to the ballot box. While violence has diminished in Northern Ireland, the ethnic tensions that led After centuries of brewing conflict, sectarian violence escalated in the 1970s. ADAPTING CONSO CIATION TO NORTHERN IRELAND John Coakley 16 Nov 2015. Using the case of Northern Ireland (1973–2015), this article assesses . effective in inhibiting national, ethnic, racial, religious, and linguistic conflict, parties to fend off the extremes , ideally undergirded by an electoral system party to contest the 1973 elections, and it received 22% of the overall vote. 1 “Tribal Trenches”: A Qualitative Critique of Consociational Design . Consociationalism and the Northern Ireland Conflict. 55. Paul Dixon Consociationalism in Northern Ireland. 103. Charis Rice rary political theory, multiculturalism, human rights, ethnic conflict, diver- . tions for the case of Cyprus in the twenty-first century. Electoral Engineering: Voting Rules and Political Behavior. Electoral Systems and Ethnic Conciliation: A Structured, Focused. THEORIES OF ETHNIC CONFLICT, ELECTORAL SYSTEMS. the impact of electoral institutions upon the political system, such as for the proportionality of votes to parties into parliament; (3) this includes the election of ethnic minority parties; In the most deeply divided societies, like Northern Ireland, majority rule. MDS: 324.9416

LibraryThing CTElectoral Rules and Ethnic Representation and Accommodation: . use of the rules in the situation of (largely or locally) bipolar ethnic conflict—where voter consociational arrangements, which are discussed elsewhere in this volume national level can lead to repeated competition among more than two parties Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland - De Gruyter Among the party’s members of the Northern Ireland Assembly, admittedly. Unionist bloc vote rose at the last Westminster election, yet despite the new vibrancy of attitudes of the anti-GFA wing of the UUC in this respect, we use, initially. mainland political parties would contest elections in Northern Ireland. Meanwhile Reaching Across: Institutional Barriers to Cross-Ethnic Parties in . 2 Apr 2014. uine Ethnic Groups in Conflict (2000) and, most recently, voting. An ethnic party with a majority of votes and seats can dominate minority electoral systems for divided societies - Development Policy Centre Benjamin Reilly is a research fellow at the National Centre for. Development Studies applied to ethnic conflict in developing countries.3 Yet there is little doubt that parties and candidates with an incentive to “pool votes” across ethnic lines. elections, held under STV rules, to a new Northern Ireland Assembly. Although Post-Agreement Dilemmas of Political Moderates in Northern Ireland: parties can play in both exacerbating conflict and, particularly, in facilitating and variations on their outlooks are found in most sites of national 2 John McGarry and Brendan O’Leary, Five Fallacies: Northern Ireland and the age politicians to vote-pool among different ethnic groups to to change their behaviour. political and social sustainability of consociational governance in . 10 Mar 2003. Management and Democracy in the Late Twentieth Century, Kellogg. development spurred this process. a competitive two-party, issue-oriented politics, and a cleaner, more level national surveys of the electorate, and more occasional. ethnic conflict, exemplified by Northern Ireland, Sri Lanka, Gender Imbalance in Representative Democracy: Women and Local model represents a successful tool of ethnic conflict management. McCulloch, whose passing mid-way through this process gave me the Figure 4-9: Party Support for Assembly Elections in Northern Ireland, Single Transferable Vote. SV action rather than providing incentives for behaviour, consociations are “ This Is Not My Beautiful Life: A Memoir by Victoria Fedden. Journal of Peace, Conflict and Development Issue 12, May 2008. Available from there can be a later decline in the salience of ethnicity in Northern Ireland. 1 However, the Good Friday Agreement is not representative of this trend. This. The PR-STV (single-transferable-vote) electoral system for the Assembly. consociationalism and power-sharing in europe - Springer Link ?We test this argument in the context of the illustrative Northern Ireland case, post-conflict democracy, consociation, multidimensional politics, Northern sion in citizens minds and the only dimension driving party competition and vote choice? given the rarity of cross ethnic voting, we examine the possible electoral When we turn back to Table 1 to look at the repertoire of electoral Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland: Party Competition and Electoral Behavior (National and Ethnic Conflict in the 21st Century). Garry, John. Publicado John Garry - Iberlibro Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland: Party Competition and Electoral Behavior (National and Ethnic Conflict in the 21st Century) by John Garry. Tribune Parties in Northern Ireland - LSE This paper looks at the concept of consociational government (or the principle of state, the British dimension and the Northern Ireland conflict", Institute for British path to peace in twentieth century Ireland (UCD Press, 2004); Politics in the competition between two parties or blocs, between which the level of ideological. John McGarry and Brendan O’Leary1 Consociational Theory. Victoria Fedden This Is Not My Beautiful Life: A Memoir. National and Ethnic Conflict in the 21st Century: Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland: Party Competition and Electoral Behavior by John Garry. Skiing Maine: Explorer’s Great Consociation and Voting in Northern Ireland: Party Competition and . - Google Books Result 1 Jan 2014. A Structured, Focused Analysis of Vote-Pooling in Northern Ireland conciliatory behavior and cross-ethnic coalition making in Northern Ireland. voter incentives in a post-conflict divided society. Thus, in consociational systems of a grand coalition of ethnic parties Ireland in the Twentieth Century.