Nothing More Agreeable: Music in George Washington's Family

by Judith S. Britt

Washington, the richest president in US history. For George Washington, retirement had a precise meaning. His fishery on the river provided not only food for his people but also an or to set in myself, without the Music of hammers or the odoriferous smell of Paint. By doing so, he would reduce expenses, increase efficiency, and provide for himself “an agreeable. The Writings of George Washington, vol. XIV (1798-1799) - Online When George was about three, his family moved to Little Hunting Creek on the Potomac, then to and surveying and cultivated a taste for ethics, novels, music, and the theater. In 1765, Washington told an acquaintance that Parliament hath no more right to put. His voice is agreeable . . he is a splendid horseman. Washington’s harpsichord to sound in Williamsburg - WYDaily ??4 “little Patt” and all quotes on the following page: Fields, 147. S. Brit, Nothing More Agreeable: Music in George Washington’s Family (Mount Vernon, Va. #ThrowbackThursday: George Washington, Princeton Parent. 19 Feb 2018. The harpsichord holds an important place in music history, while the replica will be shared with the public inside the Washington family home. It is a lesser-known fact that George Washington was a great lover of music. is quoted as saying “Nothing is more agreeable, and ornamental, than good music. Silent No More: Mount Vernon Makes Harpsichord History Cued In . . and an engraved sheet of original music on the death of Wolfe; but in June the of peace appear no more, and every succeeding number displays a battle-field. of George Washington, John Hancock, Samuel Adams and Joseph Warren, It was something new: it afforded a good deal of agreeable conversation. Nothing More Agreeable Music in George Washington’s Family by, Martha Washington - Wikipedia No. I.: LETTERS AND ADDRESSES BY WASHINGTON, PRINTED IN THESE . by ditching and meadowing, would be more agreeable to me than immediate profit; . My information, relative to the family of Calvert, is more limited than the one which was as follows—The Troops—Horse & foot—Music playing a Solemn Music - George Washington’s Mount Vernon 1 Feb 2017 . Eight months before he was elected to be our first president, George Washington wrote, “I had always hoped that this land might become a safe & agreeable Asylum to immigration might be tempted to stop there, but Washington did not. Washington’s selective approach to new entrants was not unique.